Bio and policy statement

I am running to join the board for the first time with a plan to defend press freedoms, freshen up our food and beverage offerings, and make the most of the gym.

I will propose an annual report on the threats of misinformation and disinformation on social media in the region.

I will make it my mission to bring good coffee to the club. A coffee counter with a proper espresso machine and a new range of beans would be a much appreciated upgrade.

I also want to find ways to maximize use of the underutilized terrace, renovate or expand the gym and offer other activities like morning yoga so that members don't have to also pay for gym memberships.

I cover tycoons and billionaires in Asia for Bloomberg's wealth team. I moved to Hong Kong three years ago from Brazil, where I wrote about the Carwash corruption scandal and threats to the Amazon rainforest. I also freelanced in Central America for The New York Times, and started off at a small newspaper reporting on the drug war and immigration at the U.S.-Mexico border.
